IMPACT OF FINANCIAL REFORMS IN THE EURO-MEDITERRANEAN AREA
Marseille, 3-4 May 2018

The 2008 financial crisis led to problems of liquidity and capital requirements. The panic and crisis in confidence that followed were further amplified by a domino effect, causing systemic risk in the international financial system. This led the G20 and the FSB to require a strengthening of the prudential framework, known as Basel II, and to set up new rules in macroprudential and resolution areas. The response to the crisis has been strong, however, given the increasing number of standards, the expected impact on financial sector operations and efficiency must be regularly assessed. In this regard the Euro-Mediterranean area challenges homogeneous analysis as it brings together economies that are structurally very different. This diversity raises a very broad spectrum of issues. How are the international reforms implemented by Euro-Mediterranean regulators in their respective national jurisdictions? What is the cost of financial reforms’ implementation? What are the side effects and main obstacles? How to deal with problems arising from cross-border interactions?

At the European level, the components of the financial reforms, namely Basel III, macroprudential tools and resolution, are now mainly in force. While it is too early to state the definitive impact of these reforms, they have, nevertheless, achieved to render the financial system more resilient without hampering economic growth. Despite this, the work must be continued as regards shadow banking and on finalizing banking regulation. Finally, important remaining issues concern the effects that prudential regulations have on market liquidity, specifically an exit strategy for the quantitative easing monetary policy that could preserve financial stability.

The implementation of financial reforms in emerging countries is slower and depends on more varied factors than in Europe. The proposed reforms must indeed not only adapt to the institutional and financial structure of emerging countries, but must also respond to their development objectives, in particular inclusive economic growth and financial inclusion. The equilibrium between some internal priorities in developing countries and the pace of the implementation of ever-increasing international standards poses therefore an additional challenge. Nonetheless, some developing countries have already started implementing Basel III and new macroprudential and resolution policies. Finally, local authorities also have to monitor and manage the cross-border impact of international reforms on the economic and financial situations of their own countries.

The objective of this closed-door event is to facilitate high-level policy dialogue among Euro-Mediterranean countries on how financial reforms could achieve financial stability and economic inclusive growth. The event is dedicated to fostering regional cooperation, policy, and partnership will be attended by approximately 30 senior policymakers from Central Banks, Ministries of Finance, and Development Finance Institutions. They will discuss the challenges and the way forward for the Euro-Mediterranean area in the light of the financial reforms’ impact, in particular:

- Impact of banking regulation reforms on sector resilience and the systemic stability
- Challenges posed by shadow banking development and regulation
- The funding balance in a given economy between financial markets and banking credit
- Articulation of financial reforms and impacts on financial inclusion
- Cross border cooperation regarding regulation, supervision, monetary and economic policies
- The way forward to finalize reforms and maintain financial stability
- Emerging technology-related challenges including regulating fintech players and cybersecurity
