

2nd Annual Peer-to-Peer Learning Workshop of the Mediterranean Host Municipalities Learning Network

“Improving local economic opportunities for host communities and refugees”

May 09 pm - May 12, 2017

Mövenpick Hotel, Beirut, Lebanon

Concept Note & Agenda

Context

Over the five years of the Syrian conflict, affected municipalities have had to develop extraordinary resources and solutions to host refugees and ensure service delivery for all. 89% of Syrian refugees are hosted in by 3 of Syria’s neighbors (Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey), and affecting already vulnerable contexts in the region such as Iraq¹. In the region in average, 90 % of the refugees are not hosted in camps, but reside within the host communities. As a consequence of refugee influx, local governments experienced positive (increased consumption) and negative socio-economic consequences for local communities (e.g. increased pressure on public services and resources, lower wages, social cohesion at risk).

Due to the protracted nature of the Syrian refugee crisis, there is a consensus among the international community that a key objective of mid-term policies should be to increase the welfare of both refugee and host communities. This will ensure the ongoing development of host countries, boost the contributions of refugees to their respective economies and also allow them to maintain their skills, creating the conditions for repatriation and Syria’s reconstruction. As available resources are already under pressure, new economic opportunities for host communities and the economic inclusion of refugees (which does not imply political rights and access to citizenship) can mainly be achieved by boosting local economic growth (as opposed to redistributing existing resources).

Solutions to support local economic development and the creation of job opportunities have been identified and discussed², such as: legal and fiscal frameworks for access to the labor market; the improvement of the business environment to facilitate entrepreneurship and attract private investors; channeling investments to communities hosting refugees; scaling up existing public services to boost supply and demand; achieving better matches between existing labor demand and supply. The Mashreq countries and Turkey, with the occasional support from the international community, have already begun to develop and implement mid-term solutions such as investing in local economic development, creating job opportunities and reforming labor market legislation in some host countries. Local governments can be both beneficiaries and active agents of these policies: as the local economy can benefit from central legislative and fiscal reforms or national programs, local governments also provide for the services (such as physical spaces, urban transport and amenities, social and cultural services, etc.) which enable successful business and work environments.

² During several high level international conferences, among them the event “The Welfare of Syrian Refugees: Evidence from Jordan and Lebanon - Cross-Regional Learning Event Between the Mashreq and Europe On Hosting Refugees” co-organized by the CMI, the World Bank, and the UNHCR, and hosted by the AFD in Paris, February 2016. <http://cmimarseille.org/highlights/launch-wbunhcr-report-%E2%80%9C-welfare-syrian-refugees-evidence-jordan-and-lebanon%E2%80%9D>

Background

Since early 2016, and in close collaboration with its members and partners, the Center for Mediterranean Integration has been supporting host communities of refugees through its Mediterranean Refugees and Host Communities Program, by providing a peer-to-peer (PtoP) platform for knowledge and experience sharing on priority topics for municipalities affected by the Syrian refugee crisis.³ It facilitates a Host Municipalities Learning Network: a community of practice for Mediterranean municipal staff, elected representatives of host communities and development practitioners, which aims to identify and discuss innovative experiences of hosting refugees at the community level. Over the past year, the question of local economic development and associated job opportunities for host and refugee populations emerged as a key topic for host communities.

This second annual event of the CMI Host Municipalities Learning Network, is hosted by the Government of Lebanon and is organized in partnership with the World Bank, UN-Habitat, the German Technical Cooperation (GIZ), and United Cities & Local Governments- Middle East & Easter Asia (UCLG-MEWA). It aims to build on the previous discussions and deepen exchanges on how host local governments and communities, with the support of central governments and the international community, can increase local economic growth and create job opportunities, while continuing to provide resources, infrastructure and services for the common welfare of citizen, refugees and the most vulnerable. Participants will explore key local levers of action such as: stimulating entrepreneurship and attracting private investors; improving matching of labor demand and supply; providing housing and urban amenities; strengthening social cohesion.

Objectives

This annual Peer-to-Peer workshop will strengthen and build the capacity of the Mediterranean Host municipality network. It specifically aims at:

- i) Learning and exchanging on a specific priority theme: local economic development and labor market inclusion from host local governments' point of view.

³ On May 30-Jun1st 2016, the CMI and its partners organized the "Mediterranean Municipalities at the Forefront of the Refugee Crisis - Peer-To-Peer Learning Workshop for Communities Hosting Refugees" event. Following this first event, CMI and its partners developed a series of technical workshop on Solid Waste Management and on Social Cohesion in host municipalities, managed an online bilingual (Arabic/English) discussion forum for the community, and documented good practices identified through the network.

- ii) Reviewing the achievements of the Host Municipalities Network year's activities, including through hearing back from the members of the Network and capitalizing on the challenges and success, in regard to the year's theme focus.

Participants: 90

- Host local governments in Jordan, Lebanon, Turkey
- Selected national government representatives in the mentioned countries
- Syrian organizations and private sector stakeholders
- Partners: GIZ, UCLG-MEWA, UNHABITAT, World Bank
- Relevant Selected development and humanitarian partners and experts (with an active role in the event)

Location: Beirut, Lebanon, with a field visit to the city of Saida (May 11)

Workshop Sessions

Objective i) Learning on “Improving local economic opportunities for host and refugee communities”:

Participants will build on the previous discussions and deepen exchanges on how host local governments and communities, with the support of central governments and the international community, can increase local economic growth and create job opportunities, while continuing to provide resources, infrastructure and services for the common welfare of citizen, refugees and the most vulnerable.

- Thematic Session 1 - Creating job opportunities for host and refugee communities (Lead Organizer: World Bank)
- Thematic Session 2 - Stimulating entrepreneurship and private investments (Lead Organizer: World Bank)
- Thematic Session 3 - City and Neighborhood Profiles and Strategies: a tool for providing a solid platform for joint programming, collaboration and enhanced role of local governments (Lead Organizer: UN-Habitat)
- Thematic Session 4- Strengthening Social Cohesion as a key component of local economic development (Lead Organizer: GIZ)

Objective ii) Reviewing and building on the achievements of the Host Municipalities Network: challenges and innovative solutions from the Mashreq, Turkey and beyond (Lead: CMI)

The workshop will adopt an “action learning approach”, by allowing participants in each session to build action plans for the Network on the thematic discussed to move toward a solution sharing Community of Practice through the Host Municipalities Network. Participants will also be given the opportunity throughout the event to review the Networks' year's activities including launching annual event in 2016; technical workshops and webinars on solid waste management and social cohesion; online discussions; and best practice compendium.
